

How does the Charter affect Francophone identity in Quebec?

■ In 1977, Bill 101, the charte de la langue française, was put forth in Quebec.

- The bill set forth that French-speaking people are a distinct people with French being the language that expresses their identity. The bill also set forth that the people of Quebec wanted the language of government, and everyday work, education and business to be French.

■ Prior to the Charter, commercial signs in Quebec were in French only and Francophones and immigrants had to attend Francophone schools.

■ Section 23 of the Charter determined freedom of expression and equality rights.

- In 1988 the Supreme Court ruled that the law can require signs to be in French but could not prohibit the use of English in addition. The law can also require that the French is more prominent than English.

How does the Charter affect Francophone identity in Quebec?

- In 1977, Bill 101, the charte de la langue française, was put forth in Quebec.
- The bill set forth that French-speaking people are a distinct people with French being the language that expresses their identity. The bill also set forth that the people of Quebec wanted the language of government, and everyday work, education and business to be French.
- Prior to the Charter, commercial signs in Quebec were in French only and Francophones and immigrants had to attend Francophone schools.
- Section 23 of the Charter determined freedom of expression and equality rights.
- In 1988 the Supreme Court ruled that the law can require signs to be in French but could not prohibit the use of English in addition. The law can also require that the French is more prominent than English.

Why does this matter?

