But why...?

- In the west First Nations and Canada negotiated the treaties for many reasons:
 - Canada wanted to build a railroad to BC, as promised when BC joined confederation
 - First Nations and Canada wanted to avoid war
 - First Nations wanted to secure their future
 - The royal Proclamation in 1763 already recognized the rights of First Nations' to land.
- Perspective plays a role in the interpretation of the Treaties.
 - the First Nations' recorded the Treaties orally in their own languages while the Canadian government recorded the Treaties in written English.
 - The oral and written accounts disagree on key aspects of the Treaties
 - The Canadian government believes that the First Nations gave up their land under the treaties
 - Many First Nations disagree since they do not see land as being something anybody can own or give up.
