

Good or Bad?

WTO Decision

- What were the banana wars?

- A big trade fight between the European Union (a bunch of European countries working together) and some Latin American countries that grew lots of bananas. The US also got involved to back up the Latin American countries.
- The Europeans had a deal where they bought most of their bananas from their old colonies in Africa, the Caribbean, and the Pacific. This made it harder for Latin American countries to sell their bananas in Europe.

- What did the WTO do?

- The WTO is like the referee of world trade. Latin American countries complained to the WTO that Europe's banana deal was unfair.
- In 1997, the WTO agreed! They said: Europe can't play favorites: They should treat bananas from all countries more equally. Europe's way of deciding how many bananas to buy from each place wasn't fair.
