

But... why?

■ The act was originally intended to assimilate First Nations people:

■ The act determined how First Nations people were to conduct their affairs

- The act at certain points in history restricted the movement of First Nations as well as their ability to take political action, to wear traditional dress, and to be a part of traditional ceremony.

■ Until 1960, First Nations had to give up their status and Treaty rights in order to vote.

■ Pressure from First Nations caused the Canadian government to amend the act which is still in force today.

■ In 2002 First Nations people rejected the government's attempt to update the Indian Act.

But... why?

- The act was originally intended to assimilate First Nations people:
 - The act determined how First Nations people were to conduct their affairs
 - The act at certain points in history restricted the movement of First Nations as well as their ability to take political action, to wear traditional dress, and to be a part of traditional ceremony.
 - Until 1960, First Nations had to give up their status and Treaty rights in order to vote.
- Pressure from First Nations caused the Canadian government to amend the act which is still in force today.
- In 2002 First Nations people rejected the government's attempt to update the Indian Act.

What should be done about the Indian Act?

According to the 2016 Census (Statistics Canada), 977,230 people in Canada identified as being of First Nations heritage. There are 634 First Nations communities in Canada, speaking more than 50 distinct languages.

~44% of First Nations people live on reserves

According to Statistics Canada in 2011, there are more than 600 First Nations/Indian bands in Canada and 3,100 Indian reserves across Canada. Examples include the Sturgeon Lake First Nation, which like many bands, has only one reserve, Sturgeon Lake Indian Reserve No. 101.