

- These operations were dependent on surprise, enemy un-preparedness and an inability to react swiftly enough to the attacker
- Required sheer speed, specialized support vehicles, new methods of communication, new tactics, and an effective decentralized command structure
- Once believed to be a part of “doctrine” now historians know that it was:
 - “ideas that naturally emerged from the existing circumstances” and “[employing] the right units in the right place at the right time”

How did the Germans do it?
