

Then members of Canada's Senate are elected senators.

• All proceedings of the Senate are in French and English.

- Senators are not elected. The prime minister appoints them. They can remain in office until age 75. Prime ministers tend to appoint people who support the P.M.'s political party. Since only a few Senate seats become vacant at a time, however, the Senate includes people from a variety of political parties.

- The Senate has the power to reject bills from the House of Commons, but rarely uses this power.

• The Senate cannot propose laws that create or spend taxes.

- A bill cannot become law until both the House of Commons and Senate pass it.

THESENATE

THE SENATE

- The members of Canada's Senate are called senators.
- All proceedings of the Senate are in French and English.
- Senators are not elected. The prime minister appoints them. They can remain in office until age 75. Prime ministers tend to appoint people who support the P.M.'s political party. Since only a few Senate seats become vacant at a time, however, the Senate includes people from a variety of political parties.
- The Senate has the power to reject bills from the House of Commons, but rarely uses this power.
- The Senate cannot propose laws that create or spend taxes.
- A bill cannot become law until both the House of Commons and Senate pass it.

THE SENATE

- Senators represent the interests and rights of Canada's regions, and especially Canada's minorities. Senators are appointed by “division,” or region. At Confederation in 1867, the constitution identified three regions: the Maritimes, Ontario and Québec. The idea was to ensure that these regions had an equal voice in the Senate, and to ensure that Québec's Francophone population — a minority within Canada — had a strong voice within Canada. As provinces and territories joined Canada, new regions were added to the divisions for appointing senators.
- The Senate can propose laws, but usually only considers bills passed first by the House of Commons. The Senate gives careful reconsideration to all legislation proposed for Canada. This means senators provide a second round of study, debate and voting on laws proposed for Canada. Because the Senate provides a voice for regions in Canada, it brings a different perspective to issues that concern everyone.

