

OVERVIEW

Canada's Federal Political System

There are three branches to the Canadian Federal Political System. Each branch has power to perform certain functions.

The three branches of the Canadian federal Government are:

The Legislative: They make the laws

The Executive: The power to govern a country according to the law

The judicial: The power to judge and interpret laws

OVERVIEW

Canada's Federal Political System

There are three branches to the Canadian Federal Political System. Each branch has power to perform certain functions.

The three branches of the Canadian federal Government are:

The Legislative: The power to make the laws

The Executive: The power to govern a country according to the law

The Judicial: The power to judge and interpret laws

