

- When September hit, winter was fast approaching and German troops moved deeper into the Soviet Union. The supply lines became limited.
- The Red Army was to destroy anything that the enemies could use
(This was called the “Scorched Earth Policy”)
- This made it very difficult for Germany’s soldiers to become supplied with necessary food and ammunition

Stalingrad

- Summer 1942 - German troops were approaching Stalingrad
- Stalin rushed all available troops to the east bank of the Volga, some from as far away as Siberia.

Approaching this place, [Stalingrad], soldiers used to say: "We are entering hell." And after spending one or two days here, they say: "No, this isn't hell, this is ten times worse than hell."
